ABSTRACT

Attractive individuals are often seen as persuasive sources of information. However, comprehensive comparative studies investigating the pathways underlying persuasion are currently lacking. Given the significance of persuasion success in influencer marketing, we examine two prominent mechanisms through which influencer attractiveness may affect persuasion outcomes: electronic word-of-mouth and product attractiveness. The first pathway includes perceived expertise and credibility, whereas the second pathway involves aesthetic appeal. In two studies, we examine the effects of influencer attractiveness in three distinct product categories: health, beauty, and technology. The results reveal three main findings: (a) the impact of an influencer's attractiveness on

Are you planning to write your thesis in the area of (Digital) Marketing?

We get many applications for thesis supervision. Given that we are a small team, we cannot supervise all applicants but have to select based on:

- Who has participated in our Marketing seminars. Often students continue to work on a topic they have worked on in a seminar project.
- Who has worked with us as a student assistant
- Who has demonstrated strong interest in Marketing questions (internships, project work, etc.)
- Who has demonstrated strong interest by contributing to this lecture (see below)
- Who has interesting new ideas and already developed a well-outlined research proposal
- Who has (very) good grades
- Who is interested in carrying out quantitative/empirical research projects

Are you looking for an interesting project study to work on?

- Please send an e-mail to sude.arslan@tum.de!
- You will receive an invitation/suggestions for a project study that you could work on prior to the next semester.
- Please also send us an e-mail if you are in contact with a company and would like to do a project study with them. We will bring you in contact with fellow students and talk with those in the company who are responsible for internships and project studies.
